Summer 2008/2009

You wouldn't think of wearing a mask driving to work so why wear one at work? You know they are hot, uncomfortable and give you a rash - we have the Atsource solution.

Office staff are exposed to airborne contaminants as well as those working on the shop floor.

You need protection - it could save your life. No job is really worth dying for.

Protect yourself by eliminating the hazard using a Nederman Atsource extraction system.

Occupational Asthma

Occupational asthma is asthma that is caused by a substance inhaled at work. Although the contribution of workplace exposure to asthma may not always be clear, occupational asthma is considered to be the most common occupational lung disease.

Symptoms include coughing, shortness of breath, wheezing and aching chest.

These symptoms occur during the working week, day by day, and improve during absences from work, at weekends or during holidays.

Some common sensitiser substances and groups of workers who may be exposed to them are:

Sensitisers

Isoocyanates

Animal antigens

Anhydrides

Paper dust

Fluxes

Metals

Flour

Wood dust

Drugs

Occupations

Seen on a sign driving into a small town:

"You are entering a recession free zone. Pessimists turn back."

If we all make our patch a recession free zone, where will the recession go?
